I'm finding my mojo again. By the end of the week I was feeling really good about the work I was doing and the way I was managing everything. Twice on Wednesday there were moments when I could have jumped in to assist in the past. I didn't and can't tell you how good it feels even now to have have put those boundaries up. No matter how much I help others, I'm not really helping if the long term cost is my mental health and depression/burnout/anxiety so that I can't help anyone.

It's a 3-day weekend here for Labour Day tomorrow. Nice. I have surgery to remove a lipoma from my neck on Tuesday. With that, and recovery, I'll have a 5-day break from work.

Recently watched movies

Operation Fortune: Ruse de Guerre is a great Saturday night popcorn movie. Plenty of fun and knows exactly what it is. This is not fine art but it is a good time.

Episode 8 of The Last of Us was better than I felt it was. Having played the game 3 times, I knew what was coming in this episode and that took the edge off it a bit.

TV Seasons I've Completed contains a comprehensive list of all that I've watched from start to finish.

Currently gaming

Assetto Corsa Competizione and Elden Ring have been my two games of choice this week. In ACC I improved my lap times dramatically through realising I could be more aggressive through corners. I am after all in a race car and not my daily drive. Elden Ring continues to challenge. Some good progress this afternoon as I get back into the system of the game and focussed on slowing my gameplay. Block, dodge and attack. Don't just swing blindly.

Don't expect too much here for a couple of weeks. Lord of Time (The Wheel of Time Book 6) is long and will take me a bit to read.
